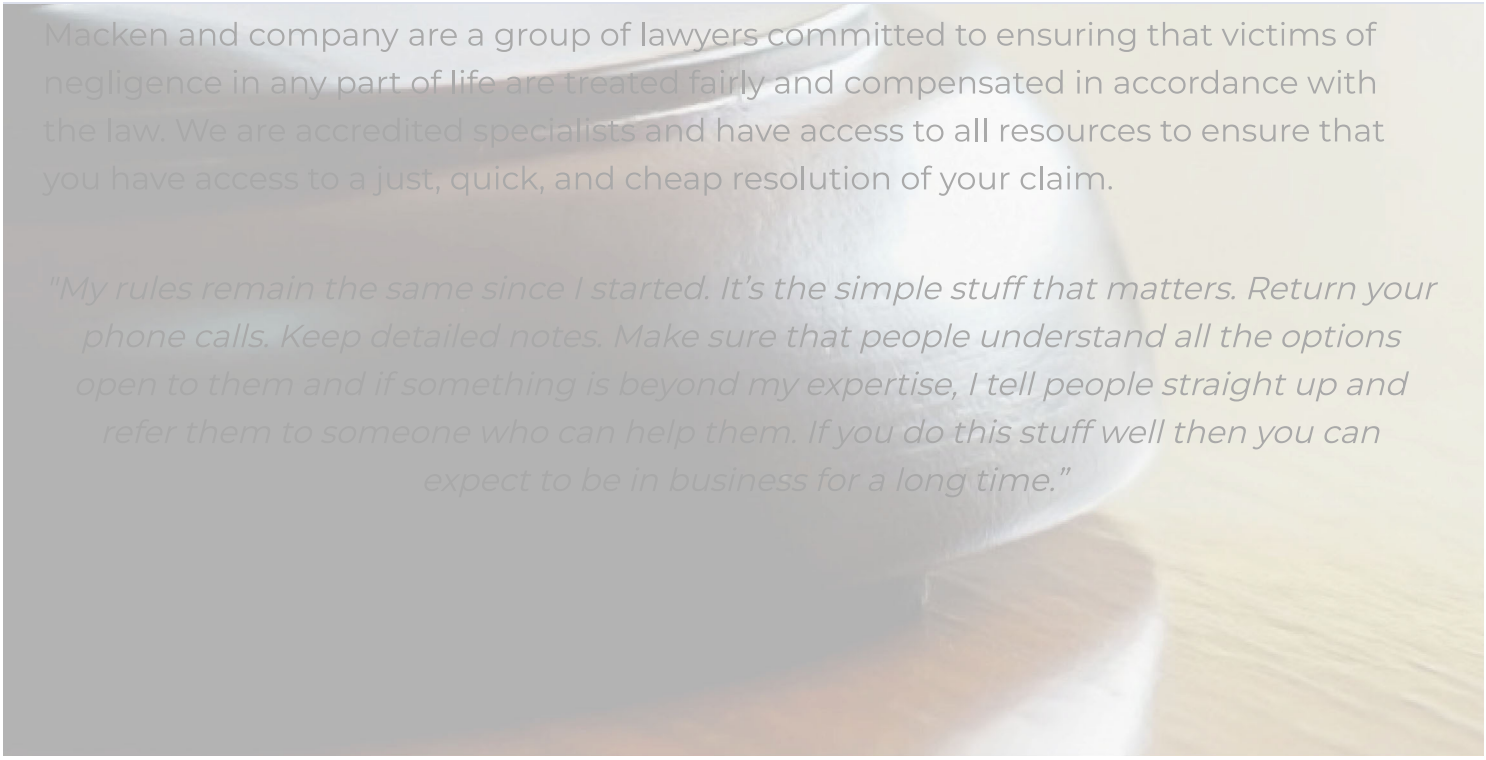
Hugh Macken

Hugh Macken has been in practice since 1986. He is an accredited specialist in personal injury law and has been in private practice for over 35 years. He holds a Master of Laws and has extensive training and experience in industrial relations matters, all types of litigation and alternative dispute resolution processes. He is a prominent Sydney Solicitor having been President of The Law Society in 2008 and has chaired the Ethics Committee, Legal Costs Committee, Employment Law Committee and served on numerous private and public boards.



Macken and company are a group of lawyers committed to ensuring that victims of negligence in any part of life are treated fairly and compensated in accordance with the law. We are accredited specialists and have access to all resources to ensure that you have access to a just, quick, and cheap resolution of your claim.

"My rules remain the same since I started. It's the simple stuff that matters. Return your phone calls. Keep detailed notes. Make sure that people understand all the options open to them and if something is beyond my expertise, I tell people straight up and refer them to someone who can help them. If you do this stuff well then you can expect to be in business for a long time."
